All the federation members met medical officer in-charge and discussed the matter. After hearing this, the officer suggested to change her surname from mishra to rath. But the members told that it would create problem to her in getting the money from her husband. They proposed that better to change the surname from rath to mishra as ASHA worker. KEONJHAR UNIT

“Participatory action for eradication of child Labour (PAECL)”

Geographic area Coverage:

20 villages of Swampatna Block of Keonjhar

Project Objective:

Complete Elimination of Child Labour from 20 villages of Swampatna Block of Keonjhar District- in the Community Development Block in which Arcelor Mittal's mega steel plant is going to be set up.

Key Activities:

In order to achieve the above goal the organization took up an integrated approach through the following activities:

1. Education Activities:

The organization believes school is the best place for children to prevent them from being child labors or potential child labors. Hence the most important strategy was to help children escape to schools. The first step was to motivate parents to send their children to school through parent counseling. Following this children were attracted to education through children camps and get them enrolled in Shradha Bhavans opened in 20 target villages. Here children were prepared for mainstream education and then enrolled in government schools. The final step was to strengthen the school education system where the PTAs, MTAs, school teachers and VECs were strengthened to ensure quality education for children.

2. Child Participation Activities:

Child labour is one of the gross violation of child rights apart from the many other exploitations children face in the villages. Thus with the aim of protecting children's rights as stated in the UNCRC Child protection Committees were set up in the villages and strengthened to oversee protection and promotion of children's rights in their respective villages.

Children were organized in Shishu Sabhas to help them to live their childhood, sensitise them about their rights and prepare them as advocates of their rights. This was a platform for their growth and a beginning for them to assert their rights to participation which is not respected in our society.

These groups are also federated at a cluster level to take their issues at a macro level before the adults.

3. Livelihood Activities:

Rights follow with some responsibilities and the immediate adults responsible to help children get their rights are their parents. But nothing is possible without economic sustainability. Most often women take up the main responsibility of bringing up their child healthily. Hence under this project women are organized and supported for economic sustainability so that with the increased income they nurture their children better. They are further linked with the government credit links to enhance in income generation activities.

4. Advocacy Activities:

Being a welfare state the final onus lies with the government to ensure all its citizens the basic human rights. But its not easily done as said so continuous lobbying and advocacy on behalf of the marginalized is required to ensure them their rights and entitlements. Here focus was made to link the vulnerable families with the different poverty alleviation schemes of the government and effective implementation of the welfare schemes and services meant for the target villages. Apart from this the issue of child labor and child rights continuously addressed at district and state level below the government for the effective implementation of CLPRA and other acts and provisions in favor of children.

5. Study:

An assessment study of the impact of proposed steel plant by Arcelor Mittal on the livelihoods, social, economy, cultural and environmental factors was undertaken. The findings of the study was disseminate among all the stakeholders. This study covers critical areas of attention for socioeconomic rehabilitation & resettlement and it suggests environmental protection measures.
